Felicity in Marriage (An Erotic Pride and Prejudice Continuation Book 1) Ayr Bray, a Lady

Turn down the lights and indulge in the passionate scenes of Fitzwilliam and Elizabeth Darcy's first day married.

This book is not just hot and steamy, but sweet and romantic."

"Arousing ... Erotic ... Seductive ... Sexy ... Mr. Darcy. Need I say more!"

"Hold onto your seat because Ayr Bray pulls out all the stops in this erotic and sexy journey of Pride and Prejudice's favorite couple, Fitzwilliam and Elizabeth Darcy, on their first day of marriage."

About the book:

Moments after the parson pronounces Fitzwilliam and Elizabeth Darcy man and wife they kiss. That kiss may have been a chaste kiss in front of the parson, their families, and God, but what takes place the rest of the day, well that's between just the two of them.

Felicity in Marriage; An Erotic Pride and Prejudice Continuation (1) takes readers on an erotic and passion filled twenty-four hours with our newlyweds. Starting in the carriage on their ride back to Netherfield Park for the wedding brunch, and not ending until they make love in the master suite at London House.

Ayr Bray promises her readers an intense passion and love between her characters, and sex, lots of erotic sex!

Extract from Chapter 1:

"No, dearest, loveliest, Elizabeth, I fully intend to do it again." He kissed her harder, this time allowing more passion to seep into his desires. His tongue applied more pressure; he sucked a little harder, this time taking her tongue in and out of his mouth a couple of times. When he pulled away Elizabeth wasn't ready, she still wanted more. Her hips were unconsciously moving back and forth against him in time with the rhythm of his suckle. Her breathing was more labored, and her fingers were wrapped passionately in his hair.

One of his hands had found the hem of her gown and already his hand was splayed on the back of her stocking covered thigh. Fitzwilliam desired to remove the offending garment, but thought it prudent to leave it in place as they likely were closing in on the last mile to Netherfield Park; the home of his best friend and now brother-in-law who was hosting the wedding brunch.

Elizabeth could not move any closer; she was now fully on his lap, straddling him like a wonton chatelaine. Her passion had been so invoked that she knew not what she was doing, grazing her ample breasts back and forth against his chest. Then to her surprise her abdomen brushed against something unexpected. Sitting back and looking at the area of Fitzwilliam's body her mother had strictly lectured her, in her youth, never to look at was an immense bulge.

His breeches were taut, and his erection left little to her imagination. Elizabeth looked back and forth between Fitzwilliam's manhood and his face. His rakish smile had left, but his eyes were dark pools of passion she wanted to dive back into.

Fitzwilliam swore, something Elizabeth had never heard him do before, then grabbed her buttocks with both hands and pulled her firmly against him. Elizabeth wrapped her arms around him and sway her hips back and forth rubbing his manhood all over her special place. He bucked against her terribly aching for the release that would only happen once he was inside of her.

A soft moan escaped her lips against Fitzwilliam's ear, and before she could think, he had swiftly picked her up and plopped her unceremoniously on the seat across from him. She leaned forward for more, but he placed his hand up to stop her.

"No Madame, we must stop. We are almost at Netherfield, and I already fear I shall not be able to leave this carriage with any dignity."

This was only a taste of one of the lesser scenes in Felicity in Marriage. If you enjoyed it, I highly recommend you buy the book to experience all of the marital relations of literature's most beloved couple on their wedding day.
