The Water Lily Pond Michael Siegel

Thanks to the medical wonder known simply as "the Daily", famed painter Walter Winston has lived to the age of 128 in full health. And he is dying. Diagnosed with Methuselah's condition, exhausted from a long life, he finds his days growing shorter and shorter, his zest for life ebbing away. Determined to do something with his last days, he sets off on a journey to revisit the places he's lived, trying to rediscover himself, his life and the people who made it worth living. He retraces the steps of his life from the shores of California to the suburbs of Arizona to the mountains of Colorado to the heart of New York City and finally to a long-dead town in rural Georgia, where his career began with a child's sketches. Along the way, he remembers old friends, visits his descendants and remembers how he and the world have changed over more than a century.
